COMMON MARKET:

THE FIGHT TO GET OUT GOES ON

Nationalist comment

WHAT WE THINK

on the month's news

Saving face?

There was something very peculiar about the so-called 'Mayaguez incident' of last month, in which an American merchant ship of that name was seized and held for a few days by the Cambodians, then recaptured by a force of U.S. Marines.

America had just suffered the most catastrophic international defeat by way of the Communist take-over of South Vietnam. Not only was her prestige in the world at a new low, so also was the prestige of the U.S. Government within America.

The schemes of the present world-planners require that, while America does nothing really effective to hinder the march of communism, her image as the number-one bastion of anti-communism and 'freedom' be preserved — not only internationally but within America itself. While the U.S. establishment, dominated by the pro-red Council for Foreign Relations, works secretly for the setting up of the communist-inspired World

State, it must never do so at such a pace that it too far alienates public opinion in its own country and destroys the illusion that the 'free world' can look to America for its protection. Were these things to happen, there could be a massive revolt from the Right within America which could threaten the entire foundations of the establishment there, and/or an upsurge of nationalism and the spirit of self-reliance in the other countries of the non-communist world.

While the communist victory in Indo-China has been fully in accordance with the world-planners' overall strategy, it has created for the moment a tactical embarrassment through having enormously reduced the prestige of one of their main allies and instruments.

Certainly, something was required to correct this state of affairs, i.e. to restore the standing of America in the 'free world' and of the U.S. Government within America.

What better than a contrived 'incident', similar to the missiles in Cuba of over a decade ago, which would enable the U.S. Government to emerge with a 'victory' which would salvage its image and divert the attention of the world from a much bigger and more fundamental defeat?

Whether the capture of the Mayaguez, and its subsequent recapture, were intended as such an 'incident' or not, the affair certainly did not seem to fit any other logical purpose, and it equally certainly provided the cue for the press to engage in a new orgy of pro-American adulation. The Daily Express, as might have been relied upon, gave the lead the day after the rescue operation with the headline, "Who's got the last laugh now?" followed by the sub-headline "The moment Ford tasted victory and America regained its pride."

The Economist, on the other hand, not written for an unthinking mass readership took a more sober view: "... that small American victory," it said, "... was greeted on both sides of the Atlantic with an overblown exhilaration that reveals more about the state of mind of anxious Americans and Europeans than about the balance of power in the Gulf of Siam."

Though we do not generally share the political outlook of The Economist, we are in no doubt that its assessment of this affair is closer to reality than that of the Beaverbrook press.

Defenceless Europe

It was no doubt in anticipation of European leaders' apprehension about America's will to stand by her allies, stimulated by the sell-out in Vietnam, that President Ford crossed the Atlantic recently to re-affirm his country's pledge to defend Europe in the event of a Soviet attack. This visit was accompanied by much speculation by the media on how far our countries this side of the water could depend on the President's word.

What seems to be lost sight of is the near incredibility of the situation in which we now live in the second half of the 20th Century, whereby the combined powers of Western and Central Europe have to even question whether they can defend themselves unaided against an attack from the East. At any other stage of history such a question would have been regarded as laughable. Either Britain, Germany or France alone were powers of at least equal rank to Russia. Only just over 30 years ago Germany nearly knocked Russia out — with a large part of German forces employed in other theatres of war and with German industrial cities under almost nightly bombardment by the air forces of Russia's allies, while those allies were simultaneously required to provide a huge part of Russia's armament.

Today the European nations West of the Iron Curtain are roughly comparable in total population to those East of it, while they are far superior in industrial and technological development and in output per worker.

If therefore Western Europe cannot do other than shiver in fear at the prospect of facing its Eastern adversary without its American nursemaid present on the spot to hold its hand, one can only make two comments.

One is that it doesn't say much for the degree of power and cohesion that we are told has been given to Western Europe by the Common Market.

The other is that Western Europe, or rather the Western European nations, must have become effete.

Certainly the latter supposition is supported by the fact that, with a greatly higher G.N.P., Western Europe is well outnumbered in tanks, guns, ships and aircraft by the nations of the Warsaw Pact — indicating that it is too weak in political will to spend adequate money on its own defence, while its adversary is not.

The supposition is also probably supported by the state of discipline, training and morale of many of the young men who would be called upon to defend Western Europe in the event of its being attacked. Reared in a 'liberal' environment in which they are continually pampered, starved of patriotism and made to think only of their 'rights', much of the youth of Western Europe today present a sorry picture in comparison with their communist counterparts.

If in the last analysis Western Europe is attacked by the Soviets and goes down in defeat without America coming to its aid, we will not have cause to complain to America; we will have cause only to blame the softness, decadence and lack of will to survive of our own Western European nations. It will not become us to lament that we will thenceforth have to live under a communist system and way of life — for our own system and way of life have proved by its defeat its inadequacy and inferiority.

Training in wrong vocations

One of the factors in Britain's industrial backwardness least discussed by economic analysts is the appalling shortage of trained technicians now entering industry from the universities, in comparison with our industrial rivals abroad.

This was highlighted recently by Lord Crowther Hunt, Minister of State with responsibility for higher education, at the annual conference of the Association of Teachers in Technical Institutions, held in Scarborough.

Lord Crowther Hunt said that the polytechnics are providing more and more places in social science subjects, while technology and science laboratories lack customers.

He questioned the whole laissez faire system by which students made their own choice of what further education they would seek while still at school and on the whole too young to make this choice responsibly. The result was a woeful maladjustment of the supply of graduates to the demands of the society into which they entered.

This magazine has for a long time condemned the excessive encouragement given to would-be students to take up the notorious non-subject of 'Social Science', a mere form of academic marxism and a training in subversion. We applaud the stand taken by Lord Crowther Hunt against the slap-happy streaming of students into places of further education, and we particularly support any drive to increase the number of students taking up technical subjects. Neither 'social scientists' nor classicists, but well trained technicians and engineers, are what Britain desperately needs for survival in the modern world.

Judge who spoke the truth

What a ridiculous furore greeted the remarks of Judge Gwyn Morris about coloured muggers in South London!

Judge Morris was only stating what every police officer in the area knows to be true, that the vast majority of muggings were carried out by coloured youths.

Yet from left-wing politicians and 'community workers' came cries of "ignorance" and "inciting racial hatred". It would appear, from those who accuse the judge of ignorance in the matter, that they know more about the breakdown of crime statistics than the courts or the police!

What in fact did the Judge say? Speaking of Brixton and Clapham areas, he said: "Within memory these areas were peaceful, safe and agreeable to live in. But the immigrant resettlement which has occurred in the past 25 years has radically transformed that environment."

Not only is there not a police officer in the area who does not know this to be a fact, there is hardly an informed citizen, black or white, who does not know it either.

Judge Morris has done a real service to South London, and to the country as a whole, by his outspokenness on this vital topic. The wrath and the hysteria that he has aroused on the political left is the surest sign that he deserves the gratitude of ordinary people.

More black births

Spearhead stands almost alone among political and current affairs journals in condemning population madness in the Western World whereby white people are being pressured from all sides, and particularly from the top, to have small families, while the population of the coloured world is bursting at the seams.

Fresh statistics supplied from the Registrar General for England and Wales only strengthen our argument. The statistics show that the percentage of coloured babies born in Britain has gone up considerably since 1970. Taking a few areas at random, the figures given are: up 11.1 to 11.6 per cent in the West Yorkshire conurbation; up 16.1 to 17.5 in the West Midlands; up 17.1

A London school — today to 17.8 in Greater London.

Taking into account mothers from the Irish Republic, it is now a fact that nearly one in three children born in London entered a family whose mother was born somewhere outside the United Kingdom. This fails of course to include children born to young coloured mothers who were themselves born in this country of immigrant parents.

In some parts of London the tendencies are truly frightening. In Brent, for example, the proportion of babies born to mothers from the new Commonwealth has for the past four years been running at around 34.5 per-cent. Again this excludes coloured mothers born in the U.K.

Similar figures for other boroughs are: Ealing 31 per-cent; Hackney 31.5 per-cent; Hammersmith 21 per-cent; Haringey 35 per-cent; Islington 26 per-cent; Lambeth 22 per-cent; Newham 30 per-cent; Southwark 20 per-cent; Tower Hamlets 25 per-cent; Wandsworth 26 per-cent and Waltham Forest 21 per-cent.

Similar trends are shown in Birmingham, Blackburn, Bradford, Dewsbury, Huddersfield, Leicester, Warley and Wolverhampton.

Of course there are many people in high places who would be delighted to see this process continue, with the result that Britain will be progressively negritified with each decade that passes. There are many in those high places who are actively promoting that very thing.

If one day these people receive the penalty that Britain has traditionally meted out to those who commit the crime of Treason, it will not be one iota more than they deserve.

EUROPE: THE FIGHT TO GET OUT GOES ON

THE FIGHT TO GET BRITAIN OUT OF EUROPE GOES ON, NOTWITHSTANDING THE YES VOTE ON JUNE 5th.

That is the position of our journal. That, we know, is the position of the National Front. The decision to take Britain into the Common Market was wrong and remains wrong. In 2½ years Britain has fared disastrously as a result of the Market. These facts are not altered by the result of a referendum, whichever way it goes.

So far as the referendum is concerned, the odds were loaded in favour of the pro-Marketeers right from the start. They had the entire national press and the greater part of the political establishment on their side. All the massed weight of big money and vested interest was placed into making their campaign one of much greater impact than that of the anti-Marketeers.

Right from the beginning of the campaign, the pro-Marketeers did not rely on factual argument to convince the British people. They depended on their ability to whip up an atmosphere of hysteria, stimulated by fear. They employed two stock lines of approach:—

- (a) They spoke about the 'awful consequences' of Britain coming out of the Market. They did not say how these consequences would be awful, least of all did they state how they would be more awful than the consequences, already proven, of staying in. They did not need to. When an atmosphere of hysteria and fright prevails, people are not interested in factual arguments.
- (b) They raised a downright red-herring by shouting about the 'extreme' left-wing views of some of the anti-Marketeers. They seized upon other issues, in no way remotely connected with the

CONSPIRACY

Again, pro-Marketeers have mounted a massive campaign of distortion and exaggeration aimed at demonstrating that, while nothing but good can come from staying in the EEC, the most terrible fate will befall the British people if they should be "misguided" enough to elect to withdraw. Here are some examples of these fictions, along with the related facts.

What makes the widespread use of such misrepresentations, exaggerations and sheer untruths so significant is that most of the people who are perpetrating them are well aware that this is what they are.

How is this extraordinary situation to be explained? Part of the answer no doubt lies in the fact that the belief that elitism — and Parliamentary elitism in particular — should always have the last say dies hard. But other very powerful factors are clearly also at work. And while one hesitates to use the word conspiracy, it is inescapable that those who see themselves as having a vested interest in Britain's continuing involvement in the Common Market are bending all their efforts in concert to seeing that their wish is satisfied without much regard to moral and ethical considerations. In short, if this is not a conspiracy it is a very good imitation of one.

C. Gordon Tether in The Spectator

Common Market, over which some of the anti-Marketeers had made themselves unpopular, and attempted to confuse them with the issue of the Common Market. They said, downright dishonestly, "If you vote against the Market, you're voting to be ruled by Tony Benn, Michael Foot and Jack Jones." A great part of the public fell for this.

Apart from these factors, one of the biggest causes of the massive defeat of the anti-Marketeers was the feebleness of the official 'Referendum Campaign' — of many of its arguments and many of its leading figures.

Quite a short time ago opinion polls showed a massive majority against the Common Market. Since that time many of the harmful results of our being in the Market have been brought home to the British people. So for the pro-Marketeers to win the referendum so resoundingly the anti-Marketeers were required to really 'fluff it' in a big way. They did.

Certainly, the 'pro' side did not win because of any great enthusiasm for Europe. They won because the man in the street was persuaded that we had to remain in, as there was "nothing much else that we could do." For this state of affairs the anti-Marketeers were entirely to blame.

Right from the start the so-called 'Referendum Campaign' ensured that it would dilute and enfeeble its ranks by its decision to have nothing to do with the National Front and to eschew any support that the NF could give to its fight. Instead of accepting the help of trained and seasoned anti-Market campaigners from the NF, it relied upon a motley collection of Johnny-come-Latelys who made, for the most part, hardly any impression on the public at all, either with the strength of their personalities or the power of the arguments.

Well, now the battle has been lost — but the war is not lost. It will continue with greater vigour than ever. There will be fresh battles in the future, as the woeful effects of the Market are increasingly made apparent to the nation.

The National Front will be in the forefront of those battles and will eventually be called upon by the nation to lead the anti-Market forces. When all the little opportunists of the old parties have drifted away, realising that for the time being there's nothing in it for them to continue to take an anti-Market position, we shall still be there fighting — as we have done from the beginning.

And because we have the will, the determination and the greater awareness of what the Market struggle is about we shall win in the end!

ONE N.F. MAN'S PROTEST

National Front member Andrew Fountaine made his contribution to the anti-Common Market campaign by erecting this large 3-piece poster at the gates of his home, Narford Hall in Norfolk. It almost stopped the traffic.

Shocking—they actually tried to get into their own meeting!

An incident of unpardonable brutality and thuggery was committed by the National Front at Oxford during the Common Market Referendum campaign.

They actually tried to get into their own meeting!

The NF had heard several days before that a crowd of left-wingers, hundreds strong, were going to be outside the meeting hall attempting to prevent people from entering and aiming to physically stop the meeting from taking place.

It would of course have been the respectable, 'moderate' thing to do to call the meeting off and concede victory to the left-wingers. Not being a respectable or moderate organisation, however, the NF, most unreasonably, took the view that it would go ahead with its meeting and, if necessary, ensure that it mustered enough strength on the occasion to guarantee its members' entry into the hall.

With this in view, a bus-load of 50 men left London for Oxford. When they arrived in the old university city they found, as expected, a left-wing mob of about 600-700 blocking the way into the meeting hall. Both NF members and members of the public were being prevented from entering.

With unspeakable fascist brutality, the 50-strong NF contingent forced a way through the mob of 600-700, thus ensuring a path into the hall and the safe conduct of the meeting. Afterwards two gentlemen of the Left, pictured here, made their own protest to the press about this unwarranted and shocking attitude on the part of the NF. We reprint the report.

NEIL WHITEHEAD, a 19-year-old first year Balliol student, claimed yesterday that an eight-strong contingent of the National Front "Honour Guard" beat him up, knocked him to the ground and kicked him unconscious.

And another Balliol student, Paul Tajfel (20), said the same thugs punched and battered him in the face and head.

Both incidents took place on Monday in Broad Street, Oxford, after National Front supporters and Anti-Fascist sympathisers had clashed outside the town hall. Inside, the National Front were attempting to hold a public meeting on the Common Market.

Outside, about 600 to 700 demonstrators were trying to stop them.

The attacks have provoked a bitter reaction from the leaders of the Anti-Fascist campaign and their chairman, Mr Tony Homer, said it showed the true nature of the Front as a "brutal fascist organisation."

"I repeatedly warned that the National Front would bring their 'Honour Guard' to Oxford and subsequent events have proved me right," he said. "It is quite clear these characters mean business."

Following a public rally which took place after the demonstration, Mr Homer urged the large crowd in St Giles to move away in groups to avoid such confrontations.

Mr Homer said media coverage of the demonstration afterwards had been inadequate and had failed to reflect clearly the events of Monday.

"It alarms us that brutal assaults were made upon the generally powerful demonstration by the Front Honour Guard," he said. They were nothing more than thugs who later roamed the streets of the city at will beating up anti-fascist demonstrators.

"Various witnesses can testify that these people were armed with a vicious assortment of offensive weapons. A bill-hook dropped by one of them was passed into police custody: one was seen wielding a bicycle chain."

NF stands in Woolwich West

Ruth Robinson, a housewife and long standing worker for the National Front, was NF candidate in the West Woolwich by-election taking place on June 26th.

Mrs. Robinson, pictured above between her husband and elder son, has lived most of her life close to the area where she was standing. She joined the NF in 1967. Before this, she was an active member of the Conservatives and has now for some time been one of the most active members of the NF Greenwich Branch.

Mrs. Robinson is a member of the Committee of the Motttingham Residents' Association and, until the start of her election campaign, was a member of the Committee set up to defend Colf's Grammar School from the comprehensive axe. Her husband, John, is a factory manager for an electronics firm in nearby Crayford. They have two sons.

At the time of our going to press the result of the election is not known.

Wail of fear from the Left

THERE could be no greater compliment to the National Front than the way in which, over the last two or three years, the anthology of left-wing, anti-NF literature has developed from small, tattily duplicated broadsheets to a range of quite sophisticated, well-printed booklets — shortly to be augmented by a large book, now being written by an anti-NF reporter on the staff of The Guardian and likely to appear prominently in all the main review columns.

A booklet which caught my notice recently was Fascism (sic) — how to smash it, selling at 10p and published by the International Marxist Group. If ever a work of such size revealed as much of the state of the left-wing mind, I have yet to see it. The booklet really is a gem of involuntary satire by the Left against itself — made all the more hilarious by the solemnity of intent with which the author tackles his subject. At the same time it might be regarded as a grudging tribute to the potency of the NF, not only by reason of the expense obviously involved in the printing of it but also in the way in which it sullenly acknowledges how far developed is the NF technique for fighting the Left on its own traditional ground. Finally, it represents one or two warnings of which we would be well advised to take heed.

Speaking of orthodox left-wing opposition to the NF, the author states: "... its weakness lies in the fact that the Front does not conform to the image of a band of jack-booted Nazi stormtroopers. Rather, many people are taken by surprise by its 'Britishness'. Worse, many workers who hate 'fascism' find that the policies of the Front correspond rather closely with many of their own prejudices. There is therefore the danger that the movement against the National Front could founder on its own political weaknesses."

Earlier, the author begins the booklet by making an observation somewhat more intelligent and factual than one has come to expect from standard textbooks of the Left. "The class struggle under capitalism," he states, "isn't a two-sided process — workers versus capitalists. There are many people who fall into neither of these two classes: these include small capitalists, farmers, shopkeepers, artisans, self-employed people, managers, students, military men, bureaucrats and people who live off stocks, shares and savings. These groups are constantly driven into debt, bankruptcy or ruin by capitalism... the antagonism between these groups and big capital is only latent so long as capitalism is relatively stable... Once capitalism runs into difficulties, the allegiance of these groups can change."

VULNERABLE

What clearly worries the author is that at such a point the groups he describes, instead of being won over to "socialist revolution", may be vulnerable to the appeal of a nationalist mass movement making use of anti-capitalist grievances and employing anti-capitalist rhetoric thought to be the exclusive preserve of the Left. His worry is that a movement like the National Front, by taking a popular position in these fields, makes it impossible for the Left to place it in the usual convenient bracket of reaction and vested interest reserved for those of whom the Left disapproves. "The fascists," he says, "will build a movement of militant nationalist revival, on the basis that foreign capital and finance capital, rather than just capitalism, is the source of the problem."

The Left, of course, will never forgive nationalists (in left-wing translation read 'fascists') for destroying its neat and simplistic picture of all free-enterprise forces lumped together under a single and indivisible 'capitalist' label. Perhaps any other concept demands from the left rank and file a degree of mental exertion of which most of them are not capable!

"Fascism," the author warns, "is capable of winning large numbers of workers to a mass movement of this kind because of its apparent anti-capitalist radicalism. If the traditional workers' organisations prove incapable of overthrowing capitalism in the midst of economic disaster, many workers will desert them for movements which offer other 'solutions'. This is especially the case if racism, national chauvinism and faith in imperialism have grown unchallenged among workers."

Here translation is again necessary. When the Left refers to "workers' organisations", it means of course nothing of the sort. There never has been a left-wing organisation of any really effective political significance that was truly a workers' organisation; there have only been left-wing organisations controlled and led by university intellectuals of mainly middle class origin that have used workers as their political cannon-fodder in order to win and retain power.

THE SAME SWINDLE

What the author really means is that when the final collapse of the international financial capitalist (shortened by him to just read 'capitalist') system comes about, left-wingers must be organised and ready to impose upon the workers their own alternative internationalist system (in fact the same swindle in a different guise) because otherwise those workers are likely to follow others who advocate policies of nationalism, patriotism and national unity — and that just wouldn't do!

About mid-way through the booklet, the author seems to sense that his arguments are hanging on a rather weak thread. He has at the beginning stated to his readers that 'fascism' (i.e. nationalism) is not "just around the corner," and that they should not confuse with 'fascism' the more immediate bogies of the Left, such as the Industrial Relations Act, which he identifies as part of the "strong state" apparatus — "the main enemy facing the workers' movement today." He then goes on to analyse the potency of the 'fascist' threat that he has dismissed as not imminent — at least in Britain.

Realising his contradiction, he puts to himself an imaginary question: why then is he concerned foremost about a 'fascist' threat and not about the more immediate threat from the existing establishment and state?

INHERENT WEAKNESSES

He answers his own question by an analysis of the inherent weaknesses of the current establishment and state in respect of its capacity to deal with the threat from the Left, and in this analysis stumbles on a few truths that should be of undoubted interest to us in the NF. His message is that, although the present state expresses its intent in unpleasant manifestations that should be opposed, the weaknesses which he pinpoints place a certain limitation on its ultimate potency. The weaknesses consist mainly of its inability to win over any significant section of the working class to its side. Speaking of "repressive" state laws, he says "Such moves could only be successful, given the working class is so organisationally strong, if as well as inflicting an organisational defeat a section of workers can be won over through their political weaknesses to passive, or better active, support."

It is clearly the potential ability of the NF to win such support that worries the author out of his wits. "... The Fascists," he says, "don't just exercise violence against sections of the masses (sic!), they reorganise the masses — using the methods of agitation, organisation and struggle traditional to the masses themselves."

He then goes on to list numerous popular issues upon which the NF has been successful in organising these very masses who, quite clearly in his view, should only be organised by the Left. By the time he has finished he has worked himself up into a veritable frenzy of leftist rhetoric. Throwing all rational argument to the winds, he yells:

"This dialectic operates in every single issue the Front takes up, including questions connected with the bourgeois family. The Front is active in the Society for the Protection of the Unborn Child which campaigns against abortion and contraception. As an organisation with an ideology of bourgeois militarism, the Front sees itself as a protector of the family, the wife taking care of the home while the husband fights for 'his country'. The liberation of women from hearth and home and the liberation of sexuality are violently opposed by the Front. Gay people in particular, whose sexuality is not linked to the production of children (for the workforce and for the 'race') have much to fear from fascists. Like all bourgeois militarist institutions, the Fascists will persecute gay people outside their organisations while providing a home inside their organisation for gays driven by their oppression or extreme male chauvinism and hatred of women. In all this the Front can make its own special contribution — the direct policing of repressive censorship laws, physical assault on gay people and so on."

After such a magnificent flow of words, what can I, as a bourgeois militarist, say but simply — phew!

How can the menace which the author is so concerned about be stopped? Yes, you have guessed it — only by force.

"It is," he says, "precisely because the fascists do use traditional methods to project themselves as an organisation, that the fight to give them no platform is so important."

Which, translated, means, "Here is a movement of the Right which, by its considerable popular appeal and its logical solutions to workers' problems, will, if allowed, present to the workers a case against which there is no answer on our (the Left) side. Against us, it will win the day on a platform of free debate. Therefore it must not be allowed that platform. It must be physically prevented from using it."

To the protestation that this would be a denial of free speech, the author contemptuously proclaims: "The real debate about free speech really revolves around the content of what is said and who is saying it." One couldn't put it plainer than that!

As to exactly how physical force is to be used against the NF, this provides an interesting study in its own right. Equally interesting is the matter of how the author sees the tactics that he advocates working out.

STOP N.F. FUNCTIONS

"The essential aim," he states, "must be to stop the major propaganda functions of the Front — marches, meetings and demonstrations. It is on these activities that the cycle of growth of the Front depends. Stopping these will break the back of its development, for it is on these things that the morale of the bulk of NF members depends."

After this little gem of psychology, the author considers the police position, and here totally contradicts his "strong state" arguments earlier on. After proposing that NF marches should be stopped by the placing of mass pickets along the route, he says:

"Of course there are never any guarantees that the police will not attack mass pickets. However, it is important to bear in mind that the police do not take decisions on the basis of the law. If they did that, they would be arresting people all the time. They take decisions on the basis of the relation of forces — both in the physical and the political sense. If counter-demonstrators to the fascists are sufficiently numerous, sufficiently organised for self-defence purposes, and the overall political climate is one of intense and growing opposition to the National Front, the police will soon find themselves unable to attack pickets without paying a really heavy political and physical price."

The message could hardly be clearer than this. A weak and flabby state (which is what the British state is today in reality, whatever the IMG may say to the contrary) will rather see law and order break down than deploy police in sufficient force and with sufficient equipment to uphold it. This is the Left's opportunity. It can contemptuously flout the law and stands in danger of being stopped, not on the strength of legality or illegality, right or wrong, but only providing that its forces are sufficiently small, and those of the police sufficiently large, to give the latter enough of an advantage to be sure of keeping order with the namby pamby methods that the state will allow them to employ. That this is more than just idle speculation can be borne out by those who were at an NF election meeting at Hackney in October 1974. There a red mob had occupied the hall in which the meeting was to be held. The police were not present in sufficient strength to remove them, nor would they let the NF members present do the job themselves. The reds stayed in the hall, and law and order and free speech took a resounding defeat.

LAW MAY LOOK OTHER WAY

The author has correctly and shrewdly assessed the opportunities that lie open to the powers of red insurrection and violence in a climate of state liberalism. If upholding the law is likely to be a tough undertaking, the law will just look the other way.

If ever the Left underlined the need in Britain for a government of the National Front, it does so here.

We must note that the author believes not only that physical factors will deter police action against those who try to stop NF marches but that political factors will too. The words "... and the overall political climate is one of intense and growing opposition to the National Front ..." seem pregnant with hidden meaning. Is the author sufficiently "on the inside" of things to know that "certain powers" will prevail over the state "at the right moment" to put pressure upon the police not to halt red violence against the NF? He would no doubt deny this, but would in that case be hard put to give another explanation for his words.

For our part, we must at least acknowledge this: we cannot say that we haven't been warned. We can be sure that our survival as a political movement rests in the final analysis, not upon the good offices of the police — who, whatever their good intentions, ultimately take their orders from above, but upon our own ability to defend at all times and with all necessary means our democratic right to speak, march and demonstrate in our own country.

FOR the last year I have been a teacher at Tulse Hill Comprehensive. This school in South London has made newspaper headlines several times in recent years with reports of violence and race tension. For all this special press attention, I have been informed by other experienced teachers that Tulse Hill is typical of many schools in the Inner London Area. At Tulse Hill more than half the pupils are immigrant, and the proportion amongst the younger children is even higher; and this school is typical.

When I entered the school there was much that angered me. "Black is Power" and other such slogans were written large on the walls and corridors, and were allowed to remain. There were also posters supporting Revolution and Black Power. Last summer the Communists organised a march through London in support of F.R.E.L.I.M.O. — the African terrorist organisation fighting the Portuguese. This march was advertised in the school by posters that depicted a grinning negro armed with a machine gun and a necklace of hand grenades. I was appalled that the Communists could so openly present such horrific propaganda in schools. Was the intention that the immigrant children should identify with this display of armed Black Power, and that the British children should be subdued by it?

Between the children there is for the most part a natural segregation. The white children keep to themselves, and similarly the children of the different coloured nations and races at the school group together. All their belongings, coats and books the children must carry with them, for otherwise they will be stolen. The pupils' desks are all empty, the doors are locked, some double-locked, because everything not guarded is stolen. For all such offences the punishments are minimal. There is no corporal punishment, no short sharp pain that sets a limit to the unacceptable. There can be no formal school detention because the boys will not attend.

RICHARD EDMONDS

Anarchy at Tulse Hill

It would be incorrect to form the impression that every class is a riot of noise and indiscipline. There are some good teachers at Tulse Hill, and it is the efforts of these men which prevent a total collapse of teaching standards and authority. However, the older teachers approach retirement and the younger teachers are finding the conditions intolerable. To replace the teachers the Education Authority recruits Asians, or Hippies, who drift in wearing jeans and the like.

LEFTIST INFLUENCE STRONG

The members of the Teaching profession are represented by several different unions. The Communist and extreme Left influence is strong in the union with the most members, the National Union of Teachers. The smaller, conservative-minded unions attract the more moderate British teachers. The take-over of the NUT by extreme Leftists is made easier by the membership, which includes most of the foreign and Asian teachers together with the white revolutionaries. The chairman of Tulse Hill NUT is an International Socialist; the secretary is a member of the Workers' Revolutionary Party. At some branch meetings of Tulse Hill NUT more than half those voting are non-British — hands raised representing the Coloured Commonwealth, Continental Europe and Hippy Revolution. Whether such people understand or care for our traditions, because the NUT has the most members their opinion is taken by the authorities as decisive: if they call for a strike, the school is shut down.

The Leftists are very active in the school. They sell their newspapers; they openly recruit pupils. I myself had not been long at the school when, in the staff-room, a Leftist approached me and suggested I should join his extremist grouping. He was dumbfounded and fled from the room when I told him I was National Front.

The posters and slogans then disappeared from the walls. These people recognise real opposition and they have become much more circumspect since my declaration.

In this Bedlam, there are pupils who, with the efforts of dedicated teachers, do well and are a credit to themselves and the character and determination they evidently possess. But for many the level of achievement is abysmally low. A fifth-year pupil in a class I started taking asked me: "What is six times six, Sir?" with no shame at his own ignorance, this was clearly the usual accepted standard. This young man, aged 15, having spent the last 10 years at school, would within a few months be leaving. What chances has he of obtaining proper employment, and what are the chances of the survival of British industry with such school-leavers as recruits? For this boy was not unintelligent, not Educationally Subnormal, indeed in many respects quite average. Last year two-thirds of the boys at Tulse Hill failed to pass the Certificate of School Education in Maths.

"PASSING PHASE"

The problems of the school and its environment are explained by the apologists of the system as a passing phase, the teething troubles of the harmony of the Multi-Racial, Multi-Cultural society to come. These advocates of the status quo leading to the Multi-Racial Britain, are pleased to describe themselves as moderates, middle-of-the-road, "between extreme Left and Right", as they sometimes put it. Yet how many of them leave, unable to cope with the problems they have themselves created unable to face the

SPEARHEAD FUND RE-OPENED

At the beginning of this year we told our readers that we hoped that it would be possible to get through the year without appealing to them for any extra financial support.

Unfortunately, we now find that this is necessary.

We have suffered some financial loss as a result of copies of the May issue being printed on the assumption that branches of the National Front would take and pay for their usual supply. On an instruction from NF Headquarters arising out of its opposition to our Constitutional Poll featured in the issue, some branches have cancelled their order for that issue.

We have also failed to sell anything like the hoped for number of our Special Anti-Common Market issue, printed in April. Response to our appeal to buy these was, frankly, poor — despite much praise for the quality of the issue. A lot of people were unprepared to back up their verbal commendations by dipping into their pockets to buy and distribute the issue. We will still try to sell this issue, although the main event to which it was geared, the Referendum, is now gone. We cannot, however, be sure that we will be very successful and we must make our financial plans on the assumption that we will end up with a large number of unsold copies.

A third factor which has brought great financial difficulty is the more than usually slow rate at which bulk-buyers have been paying for their copies. We are owed hundreds of pounds for these, going back in some cases several months. Our suppliers, on the other hand, only give us a month's time to pay. This has created a liquidity problem.

In consequence of these things, we have had to re-open the Spearhead Fund and appeal to our readers for a sum of £100 to help us through this, we hope temporary, crisis.

At the time of publication various readers have between them sent in sums of £26 towards this amount. We therefore have still to raise £74.

All cheques or P.O.s should be made out to Spearhead and sent to our usual address.

faces of those in their charge, "unable to communicate"?

Recently the Home Secretary, Labour politician Roy Jenkins, visited the school as part of his Brixton fact-finding tour. Jenkins stated "that much of the racial trouble in Brixton stemmed from Black people's lack of privilege." This patronage by white liberals is resented and rejected by the Blacks, as they made clear to him. The South London Advertiser remarked: "At Tulse Hill School, scene of much racial trouble in recent years, Mr. Jenkins met with a hostile reception from pupils, half of whom are coloured. They hung out of the windows in the eight storey building, and spat down towards his car and threw papers and chalk."

Jenkins never left his car during his three hour conducted tour of Brixton, except to hurry into buildings like Tulse Hill School. After this experience, he stated that he had no ready solutions to the problems, and called for an effort of toleration between the races. Jenkins bears a personal responsibility for the present situation, which is directly the result of policies he has advanced and, as Home Secretary, made into Law. Now bankrupt, offering no solutions, it is clear that he neither wants to know, nor cares.

WHITE WOMEN CLEAN UP

Immigration is sometimes justified in that the coloureds do the dirty work. I do not accept this. The women cleaners at Tulse Hill are all white and they are required to do some very dirty work. To be cleaned up is the spit on the floors, spit everywhere, and in the dark corridors — dark because the light bulbs are broken — the stink of urine. After school as the women clean, one often sees sauntering past them negro pupils dressed in the height of their fashion; like young lords, they do no work.

West Indian youth in particular is being encouraged to have no respect for us, nor, I believe, for themselves. The liberalism that demands and grants them special privileges, promotes a self-regard that is cancerous to their true interests. In school the educated Englishman remonstrating with the immigrant child receives the insolent reply "You don't like?" Outside of school there is the unwillingness to work and the mugging attacks. West Indian parents must be very worried about what is happening to their children, yet one waits for a member of the Immigrant community to publicly express this concern. Perhaps the cue is taken from the Establishment, whose silence on all these problems is total.

What one never hears is the sense of duty these young people should have. If immigrant youngsters were encouraged to work for themselves, to work for their people, to concern themselves with their own people, their problem of alienation, of futility, might be solved by the security of possessing a national and racial identity. Then there would be boys and youths working with a purpose, clear in the understanding that their destiny is to help their own people to build up their own countries.

In this multi-racial school there are yet many British children from the homes of the decent working class families of the neighbourhood. Many of these children do well, and are a credit to themselves and their parents. But others give up, become apathetic or obstructive and sink into a slough of despondancy. They feel themselves the children of a dying community, heirs to nothing but the second and last place, with little pride, no hope, and nobody caring or being responsible.

LABOUR LEADER'S HYPOCRISY

Ashley Bramal, the leader of the Inner London Education Authority and Labour G.L.C. councillor for Bethnal Green, is the man ultimately responsible. Ashley Bramal's son attends no State-run comprehensive but a private, fee-paying school. It is Ashley Bramal, his minions and high-placed supporters who are responsible. We know the type: the Lefty-liberals, the do-gooders who decide the conditions we live in, who decide the conditions under which our children are schooled. These people must know the conditions in the schools, yet they use their authority not to remedy them but to exacerbate them by promoting more "Self Expression", less discipline, more anarchy. One must conclude that the lefty-liberal Establishment wants the breakdown of our education system. It wishes to deny our children an education. The Establishment wants a generation, a people unable to question or oppose. And this is what we must do: we must oppose. The Ashley Bramals and the Roy Jenkins must be removed from public office.

For its part, the immigrant community must insist that its youth appreciate the opportunities for education and self-improvement being offered so that they may fulfil their duty to their own people and by serious and purposeful demeanour accord respect to the people of this land.

The British pupils have the right to the education which will prepare them for the work and responsibilities of their future. This education must be free from Communist subversion, so that teachers and pupils may then take pride in what they are achieving. And so that we may see our children secure in their well-being and future, we must strive and believe and fight.

THE COMMONWEALTH: ANOTHER VOICE

MANY British people were brainwashed into voting in favour of the Common Market on June 5th by stories that our kith and kin in the Commonwealth no longer wished to preserve any close links with this country. Speeches by certain contemporary Commonwealth politicians, such as Australian Premier Gough Whitlam, were quoted as evidence of this and of the desire of Commonwealth countries for us to stay in Europe.

Mr. Whitlam, however, is not necessarily any the more representative of his people than the Wilsons, the Thatchers and the Thorpes are representative of the people of the United Kingdom. We reprint here a letter that was sent to the Organiser of the British League of Rights, an anti-Common Market group, by a correspondent in Australia. It is of course the type of letter that never gets into the columns of the big newspapers, who are today all sold out to the Common Market cause, and seek to suppress even the smallest sign that there are still pro-British forces in the Dominions.

"Dear Mr. Martin,

"I have been following with interest the progress of the referendum campaign for the British people to decide their own national future by staying, or not staying, in the Common Market.

"I am sure many more realise now that this is not the answer to their problems and many of the glorified promises were not as promised and are vastly different to the picture painted.

"You are to be congratulated on your anti-Common Market stand and I can assure you that you have the support of many Australians in this matter. It is a disaster not only for Britain to stay in the Common Market but also a disaster for Australia and the rest of the free world which is fast becoming less and less free. We feel if Britain does stay, it will mean the final crumble of a great wall for which many wars have been fought to protect, not only Britain but the rest of the free world, and they too will lose their sovereignty along with Britain.

"Our Royal Family stands for all that which is good for mankind but which, at present and for a long time, has stood against the Evil Forces of mankind.

"It is our earnest wish to see the British Commonwealth re-generated and I can assure you that many thousands of Australians join with me in this matter. We too are standing against forces seeking to destroy our Heritage, Our Queen and our Flag.

"You have my permission to use this letter if it can be of any help.

"Good luck and God be with you all.

"Yours sincerely, Maisie Reynolds."

LETTER ON THE FRONT

I WOULD like to reply to the letter by Messrs. Turner and Foley (October Record). I am a member of the TGWU and of the National Front and nothing in the NF policies show them to be anti trades unions.

Indeed in their statement of policy stronger unions are advocated. Many trade unionists are members of the National Front and more and more are joining as they see that this is the party that really puts Britain first.

Britain can go it alone, by hard work

READING the recent letters in the Dear Mr. Editor column, supporting the Common Market, one cannot avoid noticing that the writers appear to suffer from an acute guilt or inferiority complex.

They all feel the need to join hands with someone else, to lean on Coloured immigration is to the detriment of the British workers as immigrants help to keep wages down, for example, if hospital staff had been paid a decent rate in the past we would not now be in the position of having to depend on overseas workers. Such is the state of affairs that some hospitals have to close down at certain times, including our one at Yarmouth.

The NF does not blame the immigrants for bad conditions, we do blame the politicians of all parties who brought them here with the connivance of international capitalism to create a pool of cheap labour. Also the presence here of up to five million aliens certainly doesn't help our housing shortage and other social conditions.

The next part of their letter has been used so often before as to become boring, this harking back to Germany of the thirties. People such as Turner and Foley, frightened by the amazing rise of the National Front will use any means against us. These attempted smears will fail as did the violence against the NF on recent marches in London and Leicester.

something and to lose their identity in the crowd. Independence and pride of purpose is forgotten in their craving to join the herd.

Was this the type of person who built the Britain of yesteryear? The Empire? The workshop of the world? I think not.

One can only conclude that they are the product of an age where individuality counts for nothing, an age where people are counted as units, to be cared for from cradle to grave, to be cosseted with hand-outs, doles and subsidies no matter what the cost, or who pays.

An age where the shiftless, the feckless, the weak-kneed and the lout are classed as equals and where thrift, patriotism, morality and independence are scorned.

To give away one's birthright for a mess of pottage may suit the morally weak or craven.

However, in this day and age it cannot be said often enough that man does not live on bread alone and needs other things in life as well.

He also needs freedom, real opportunity, independence and a chance to prove himself.

There is nothing wrong with Britain that leadership and hard work cannot put right.

Britain does not need the Common Market: 'The sooner we're out the better.'

It should never be forgotten that an ocean of blood and tears was shed in the last war against Hitler's 'new order' in Europe.

To many British people the Common Market represents the same concept, minus the architect.

Sir.—According to a report in your paper, I am a "fascist." No matter that I fought against Germany in the last war, was twice wounded and later became a P.O.W., the Communist-inspired Exeter Committee of Anti-Fascists, or whatever title they give themselves, have spoken.

I am a "fascist" because I support the pro-British National Front! How convenient for the enemies of this country to be able to confound all patriotism with fascism. How convenient and how insidious.

I joined the National Front because it appears to be the only party that offers serious opposition to the Communist menace both within our gates and without (hence the frenzy of the Communists' attempts to deny us freedom of speech).

So far as I am aware there is no other party that has fought to stop our small island from bursting at the seams as a result of coloured immigration. The National Front alone speaks for the untold number of ordinary Britons who are sick of seeing their fine country sold short by the internationalism of the Tory, Labour and Liberal parties.

NOT LIKE THIS

AS a member of the National Front I feel it my duty to answer the charge made against our organisation by the Communist National Union of Students that we are "racists and Fascists." We do not hate the coloured races nor do we intend to come to power undemocratically or set up a one party state dictatorship.

The Communists call us racists and Fascists because, firstly, by calling us racists and posing as the friends of the coloured immigrants the Communists hope to gain the support of the coloured immigrants.

Secondly, by calling us Fascists they hope to turn the British people against the National Front by associating us with our hated, feared and ridiculed enemies of the Second World War.

But if we take a look at Communism we find that it is a world-wide movement and its final aim is a united world people ruled over forever by a world government.

This would be dominated by the teeming millions of coloured people and run by a ruthless gang of international financiers.

Now the Communists know that the National Front will never accept the Common Market and its successor, world government. And, if we become strong and popular and unite the white Commonwealth and proudly retain our racial identity and refuse to be submerged nationless, raceless kind, then their establishing an eternal communist world government will be destroyed. B. T. L. Westbourne Road, Penarth.

Not Fascist

Sir,—I am writing with reference to your editorial reference on Monday to the National Front, in which you described it as a "Fascist" organisation.

The National Front is a democratic British Nationalist party, seeking to gain power through the ballot box. It was to this end that the party fielded 90 candidates at the last General Election. Likewise are the aims and internal structure totally democratic. The National Front has a great many ex-Servicemen in its ranks, many of whom gave several years of their life fighting to preserve the British way of life against totalitarianism.

Any member of the National Front who sought to use the movement to promote Fascist aims would find himself expelled from the party.

Harrogate Advertiser

Sir, — Some pro-Marketeers have tried to cast doubt on the fact that Britain's continued membership of the EEC would involve a serious erosion of sovereignty. We need refer to no better authority than Mr. Edward Heath who said on November 17th, 1966: "We should recognise this loss of sovereignty and its purpose. We accept the Rome Treaty unequivocally."

The extent of this loss of sovereignty is not always realised. EEC law takes effect in this country without having to be passed by Parliament and that legislation takes precedence over British Acts of Parliament. Contrary to Common Market myth, individual States or even a majority of States do not have the power to amend recommendations of the European Commission. Realisation of the extent of particular powers taken by the EEC certainly has a sobering effect. EEC Council Regulation 17 states that the Commission shall have the right, without magistrates' warrant or court order, to examine without notice, the books and documents of "any enterprise" to make copies of them and to demand instant answers to questions about them. If they meet with any opposition, they can always use their powers under Article 101 of the Treaty of Rome which allows the Council and the Commission to take "any" appropriate measures to enforce obedience.

Pro-Marketeers have frequently suggested that the vast majority of people do not understand the EEC. One wonders whether the MPs who voted for Britain's entry really appreciated what our membership involved. If they did, they certainly have a lot to answer for. — Yours,

The resolution speaks of "myths" and indulgence in "wild, false propaganda." I have no means of knowing what the term myths refers to, but National Front statements on the subject of immigration are neither wild nor false.

One leaflet, which we have put out recently in Reading, states, that we now have "Three million coloured immigrants in Britain, with a promise of tens of thousands more."

Although there might be some argument about numbers, the figure of three million is as reasonable as any, since it appears that not even the government knows the real figure. "Tens of thousands more" cannot be challenged, in view of the situation in East Africa, where there are still 100,000 British passport holders under notice to quit, all of whom are likely to end up here in a few years.

This leaflet also refers to the "vast areas of our big cities which have been taken over by aliens." Anyone who has visited Southall, Woverhampton, Bradford or Leicester recently can attest to the truth of this claim.

The statement that "our children's education is suffering through being in multi-racial classes" is also true, since, because of the backwardness of Afro-Asian children, teachers have to spend more time trying to bring them up to standard and white children's education suffers accordingly. And the fact that there are dozens of extra educational services needed to cope with Afro-Asian illiteracy and language difficulties means less money is available for ordinary educational needs.

This then is presumably the "racial propaganda" referred to. The pernicious Race Relations Act already limits native Britons' freedom of speech and undoubtedly the I.W.A. aim at a complete ban on all comment or activity concerned with the Afro-Asian community, unless it aims at furthering their already highly privileged position.

Ugly scene in capital

INCIDENTS that happen in our capital, like the violence in Red Lion Square, could soon spread to the provinces. I happened to witness this ugly scene.

On an intended walk to Downing Street I could hear drums and saw what seemed to be a mile of Union Jacks. A distorted version in the national Press said a parade of 750, but I can assure you it was thousands, including women and children who obviously did not want to fight.

But from the determined look on the Nationalists faces, those wonderful policemen must certainly have saved the couple of hundred communists from further casualties.

Red infiltrators threaten Loyalist unity

by a Correspondent in Ulster

AS you read this article, a part of the United Kingdom as large as Yorkshire, nearer to London than most of Scotland, and inhabited by over one million patriotic British citizens stands in imminent danger of falling under the tyranny of Communism. This is the Province of Ulster.

Most British nationalists will already be aware of the most obvious aspects of this threat: the openly Marxist Official I.R.A. (which maintains cordial, though unofficial, relationships with the Communist Parties of Ireland and Great Britain); its Trotskyite splinter group the Irish Republican Socialist Party; and the Provisional I.R.A., which, while less openly Marxist, nonetheless is on extremely friendly terms with the Trotskyite International Marxist Group and publishes an openly leftist newspaper, An Real ("The Star").

British nationalists have often taken comfort in the belief that were the present British Government, with typical gutless cowardice, to abandon Ulster, the Loyalist paramilitary groups are staunchly anti-Communist and militarily quite capable of defeating all the forces of Republicanism (including the Irish Army) should they attack Ulster. Unfortunately, this belief is largely unfounded.

Communism is not by any means restricted to the Republican side. There is a political party, the British and Irish Communist Organisation (also known as the Workers' Association for the Democratic Settlement of the National Conflict in Ireland) having a considerable influence within the Northern Ireland Labour Party and advocating a Communist Ulster within a Communist Britain rather than within a Communist Ireland (the so-called "Two Nations" theory). There are also some senior members of Loyalist paramilitary organisations who have become converted to the idea of an independent Communist Ulster, an idea welcomed by the Official I.R.A., who are prepared to accept a "6-County Ulster Workers State" as a transitional step to a "32-County Irish Workers State".

The organisation most seriously affected by Communist infiltration is the 20,000 man Ulster Defence Association. The titular leader of the U.D.A., "Major-General" Andy Tyrie, is politically naive and has little real control over the organisation. The real power in the U.D.A. is wielded by such people as Glenn Barr, a member of the U.D.A. Inner Council, "political advisor to the U.D.A.", and prominent in the Ulster Workers' Council during the Constitutional Stoppage of May 1974.

"ULSTER SOCIALIST REPUBLIC"

Barr is, and always has been, an extreme left-winger in the factory where he works near Londonderry. He has acquired a reputation as a militant shop steward, and only the anger of his Loyalist co-workers prevented him from accepting an invitation to speak at a Republican Socialist rally in the Bogside in 1970. He favours an independent "Ulster Socialist Republic", and has made little secret of this.

He was one of the U.D.A. delegation, which also included Tyrie, which visited Colonel Ghaddafi, the left-wing dictator of Libya, in 1974, and negotiated a deal by which Libya would supply Soviet-made Kalashnikov AK47 assault rifles and other military equipment free to the left-wing faction of the U.D.A. in return for a more militant leftist line being taken by the U.D.A. if and when it rules Ulster.

Barr is now Chairman of the Ulster Loyalist Central Co-ordinating Committee of Paramilitary Organisations, which until recently included the U.D.A., the Ulster Volunteer Force, Orange Volunteer Force, Down Orange Welfare, and some other smaller organisations.

Another leading leftist in the U.D.A. is "Colonel", formerly "Brigadier" Thomas ("Tucker") Lyttle, formerly U.D.A. Press Officer and one of the U.D.A. Libya delegation, who was responsible for issuing an order in late August 1974 to all U.D.A. units instructing them not to join in the National Front-Loyalist anti-I.R.A. march through London on September 7th and dissociated themselves and their men from the NF as it was "fascist" and "racist". This order was widely ignored by mainland British U.D.A. units.

In January 1975, Lyttle, growing impatient at the insufficiently left-wing line of the U.D.A. leadership, led the Shankill Road unit of the U.D.A. in a short-lived rebellion against Tyrie and the Inner Council. This dispute was soon amicably settled, although it cost Lyttle demotion to "Colonel" and his job as Press Officer.

Other left-wing U.D.A. men include

"Lieutenant-Colonel" Andy Robinson, Commander of Londonderry U.D.A., and "Lieutenant-Colonel" Ronnie Reid, 2nd in command of East Belfast. Nor is this Red infiltration a recent phenomenon; when "Lt.-Col." Ernest "Duke" Elliot of Woodvale U.D.A. was shot on 7th December 1972, books by Trotsky and Che Guevara were found in his car.

ROWNTREE TRUST

Under the leadership of this leftist clique the U.D.A. has degenerated grossly from its high point in 1972. A "welfare section", the Ulster Community Action Group, has been set up, financed by the notorious Rowntree Trust (which also financed Gerry Fitt's Social Democratic and Labour Party to the tune of £11,000) and the Libyan Government. The Dublin Government has also been approached for funds! U.D.A. leftists are in close contact with the Official I.R.A. via its front organisation the Northern Ireland Civil Rights Association and they are jointly drafting a "Bill of Rights" for Republicans!

U.D.A. officers daring to oppose these leftists are savagely punished. For example, the U.D.A. C.O. in Portadown, a staunch anti-Communist, was severely injured when a bomb planted by U.D.A. left-wingers exploded in his car. Death threats have been made against those Loyalists outside the U.D.A. who dare to speak out against this creeping Communism — and the rampant gangsterism and protection rackets run by those U.D.A. men who are "in it for the money".

Those who have bravely spoken out include: Mrs. Jean Coulter, former Official Unionist Assemblywoman for West Belfast, Democratic Unionist Councillor Fred Proctor of Belfast Council (who was recently shot and wounded), Frank Millar, former Official Unionist Assemblyman for North Belfast, and even Mr. Thomas Passmore, County Grand Master of the Orange Lodge of Belfast.

Communists were also involved in the 1974 U.W.C. strike which brought down the crypto-Republican "Executive" and ended the Sunningdale sell-out. Glenn Barr was on the U.W.C., and Jim Smyth, a card-carrying member of the pro-Moscow Communist Party of Ireland, was the U.W.C. Press Officer (and, much to his annoyance, was featured on the front cover of the July 1974 Spearhead).

However, the situation is far from hopeless. It cannot be stressed too strongly that this Red rot has set in mainly at the top of Loyalist organisations, and that the rank and file membership are almost to a man staunchly Loyal decent British patriots, who are beginning to awake to the Communists who are using them for their own ends.

In August, 1972, a large section of the U.D.A. broke away in protest at the Communism and gangsterism rife in the upper echelons of the U.D.A. to form the U.D.A. Young Militants, who have since maintained themselves as an anti-Communist Loyalist fighting force. The U.V.F., which also suffered from Red infiltration, expelled in November 1974 a number of Communists from the organisation. These leftists formed the openly Connollyite Ulster Citizens' Army (about 60 strong) which published the names of 13 of their former comrades in the U.D.A. and U.V.F. who had been involved in "attacks on the Catholic working class".

The U.C.A. has now faded into impotence. The U.V.F. then issued a Statement of Military Policy which was strongly anti-Communist. "The U.V.F. shall gear itself to resist the upsurge in violent revolutionary socialism which will be unleashed throughout Great Britain and Ireland in the near future."

CLIQUE OF COMMUNISTS

The U.V.F. subsequently left the U.L.C.C.C. which was, and is, run by Glenn Barr, and has now begun a campaign to eradicate permanently the clique of Communists and criminals controlling the U.D.A. Although a very few leftists remain in the U.V.F., the U.D.A.'s accusation that the U.V.F. is "Marxist" is both untrue and ludicrously hypocritical.

Leftists have had very little success in infiltrating the Loyalist political parties of the U.U.U.C. which, as both 1974 General Elections have shown, now command the support of the majority of the Ulster people. The only significant infiltrator is the ubiquitous, and thoroughly odious, Glenn Barr, who has wormed his way into the Vanguard Unionist Party, for which he was an Assemblyman and is now a Convention candidate for Londonderry.

His constituency association has had many violent arguments with him over his leftist ideas and visit to Libya and he very nearly did not get the U.U.U.C. nomination for the Convention elections. The U.U.U.C. may be infected with Ulster "nationalism" born of frustration and despair with the present Westminster politicians — and who can blame them? — but at least it is not significantly Communist infiltrated.

However, even if Communism were to be, as it soon may be, totally eliminated from the Loyalist camp, thus ending the danger of conquest from within, the danger of conquest from without would still remain and the situation in this respect is far worse than many people realise.

Were British troops to be withdrawn, as the present Westminster parties would clearly like to if they could do it without seeming too obviously to be capitulating, Ulster would be attacked by the Irish Army, the Provisional I.R.A., the Official I.R.A. and the I.R.S.P.'s military wing, the so-called People's Liberation Army — all of which would undoubtedly collaborate, at least initially, in their attack on the Loyalist population.

The largest of these Republican forces, the Irish Army, is a modern, fairly well equipped and trained fighting force numbering about 50,000 men. It is equipped with Panhard armoured cars, field guns, ground strike aircraft, helicopters and a rather feeble Navy, consisting of fishery protection vessels.

The Provisional I.R.A. is not large, able to mobilise at most 5,000 trained men in a civil war situation, but all those men could be armed with Soviet infantry weapons — the excellent Kalashnikov AK47 assault rifle and the older Simonov, with plenty of ammunition for both. The Provos have used their much vaunted "ceasefire" to re-arm, re-equip and regroup. At least one consignment of AK47's is known to have been landed at the pro-Republican port of Warrenpoint, Co. Down, in late February.

I.R.A. ARMS IN EIRE

They and the Officials could jointly control much of Belfast and West Ulster. The Official I.R.A., often neglected by commentators on the Ulster situation because of their 3-year ceasefire, have used their obscurity, freedom from security force harassment and international Communist links to become the best armed and trained force in Ireland, with huge arms stockpiles in the Irish Republic. The People's Liberation Army is small but very well armed.

In contrast, the Loyalists could mobilise 150,000 men, mostly badly trained or untrained, and could arm at most only 10,000 of them with a mixture of Ulster Defence Regiment Self Loading Rifles and Sterling sub-machine guns (assuming the withdrawing British forces did not confiscate these, as they might), ancient Steyr rifles left over from the 1912 U.V.F. and a few unreliable home-made mortars, with very little ammunition for any of these weapons.

Far from easily defeating the Republican forces, this hastily-organised, ill-armed and undisciplined rabble would be rapidly annihilated. Even assuming that the trained Loyalist paramilitary forces fought magnificently (as is very likely — Ulstermen showed their fighting spirit and courage at the Somme in 1916), Ulster would fall in weeks, at most.

The Official I.R.A. would probably leave the Irish Army, the Provos and the P.L.A. to take the brunt of the fighting, and would then step in to impose their "32-County Irish Workers State" by force — they have the manpower and arms to do this.

The consequences of the establishment of such a Communist dictatorship on Britain's doorstep are all too easy to imagine: a massive boost to the morale of the British Left, material aid to Welsh, Scottish and Cornish separatist terrorists and possibly also the formation of English leftist terrorist groups, all sponsored by the "Irish Workers Republic". Thus, far from bombings in Great Britain ending by its abandoning Ulster, Great Britain would see the most massive bombing campaign since the last war and might well herself fall to Communism — so the survival of Loyal Ulster is vital to every British citizen.

LOYALIST HOME GUARD NEEDED

The British nationalist reader may be wondering at this point what he (or she) can do to help Ulster and thereby help to avert the above terrifying scenario. Firstly, individually and collectively through the National Front, he can demonstrate to the Loyalists of Ulster that their fellow Britons have not forsaken them. It is this feeling of abandonment which breeds "Ulster nationalism" and helps Communists in the Loyalist camp.

Secondly, if he has any personal contact with Ulster Loyalists, either as individuals or in an organisation, he should expose to them those Communists masquerading as "Loyalists" for what they really are: enemies of the people of Ulster and indeed of Britain as a whole.

Thirdly, by explaining the importance to all the people of Britain the cause of Ulster to those of his friends, workmates and fellow patriots who are as yet uncommitted on this issue, he can help mobilise the whole of the British nation in support of that part of it which is under attack.

Finally, by actively supporting the National Front he can help to bring about a real solution to the Ulster problem.

If a British Government, either as a result of pressure from the National Front or due to the NF becoming that Government, committed itself permanently and unconditionally to the defence of Ulster within the United Kingdom, and if the Loyalist population were officially organised into an armed Home Guard under local Loyalist control, then the Loyalist paramilitary organisations which, though necessary in the present situation, are weak and vulnerable to Red infiltration, could safely be disbanded. The Loyal people of Ulster would then feel secure in the knowledge that, as the National Front slogan so rightly puts it: "ULSTER IS BRITISH FOREVER".

'YES' OR 'NO' IN REFERENDUM...

THE FUTURE STILL BELONGS TO US

AS I write this article on Referendum Day I have no idea whether the British people have at long last asserted a desire to be a free people by voting 'No' to the Common Market.

If the vote is a substantial 'Yes' — as now seems likely — then I will agree that we who campaign for national freedom will have lost a battle, but will not agree that we have lost the war.

The reason why I would assert that is because I am certain that the pro-Marketees have not refuted our fundamental objections to the Common Market, much less have they won the hearts of the British people.

In the event of their winning, all they will be able to claim is that they were able, momentarily, to shake the faith of this generation of British people in themselves; to persuade them that they cannot stand on their own two feet and that even if they could, they need to be protected in the warm embrace of Big Brother.

This, really, is the crux of the pro-Market case: the assertion — usually implicit, rarely explicit — that Britain as a nation-state is a "thing of the past".

I emphasise that this contention has been rarely explicit in pro-Market propaganda. They know that such assertions in the ears of most British people sound defeatist, unpatriotic and treasonable. And, of course, that is precisely what they are.

But this is not to say that such assertions have not been made during the campaign. They have — and by none other than the arch Euro-Traitor, Edward Heath.

TRAITOR HEATH

Two days before Referendum day Heath participated in a late-night televised debate at the Oxford Union. Perhaps because he was the last speaker in a very long and boring debate which he knew would certainly have driven the majority of viewers to their beds before he rose to speak, he felt it was safe to express his disdain for the nation-state and his conviction that Britain is dead.

I cannot quote his remarks verbatim, but I think I can give a fair resume of his essential point:

When I was last debating in this chamber as a student, my fellow students and I had hanging over us the certainty that we would have to go to war to fight tyranny. In that war, Europe tore itself apart. A generation previously, Europe experienced worse carnage.

It was clearly the nation-state structures in Europe that caused the two World Wars. Is it not a good thing, therefore, that we should seek to eliminate war by eliminating the nation-states of Europe?

It was interesting to note that when Heath spoke of the "tyranny which his generation would have to fight" he only referred to Axis countries and not to Stalin's Russia.

While walking down Memory Lane he forgot to mention that whilst an officer of the Oxford Union he visited Spain with a fraternal delegation to the Republican forces. He also neglected to mention what a considerable help to him in his formative years were cosmopolitan figures such as Royalton Kisch and Arnold (now Lord) Goodman.

The argument that Heath advanced to justify submerging Britain in Europe can be and is used to promote the World Government idea. And, as we learned some years ago from former Conservative Cabinet Minister Duncan Sandys: "the Common Market is a step on the road to World Government" . . . as if we couldn't guess!

Our reply to the "peace through internationalism" argument is clear and rooted in historical fact, not in woolly-minded 'idealism'. It was not the existence of nation-states that caused the two world wars, or the Napoleonic wars, come to that.

They were caused by various forms of internationalism — Fascist, Communist, International Financial — each of which sought to impose their form of unity over the whole of Europe, if not over the whole world.

FINANCIAL IMPERIALISM

Modern day internationalist idealists will doubtless claim that Napoleon, the Kaiser and Hitler were imperialists, not "real internationalists". But such a claim only goes to show how gullible they are.

Anybody who has the slightest knowledge of what power is, who has it, and how it is used, will know that modern-day internationalism is promoted and controlled by the International Financial coterie whose lust for power and imperialistic proclivities are just as great as any of the latter-day despots.

The only difference is that the Napoleons and the Hitlers displayed their ambitions openly and crudely, while the International Financial coterie are at pains to obscure their identity and intentions, and operate through carefully selected proteges and career men such as Edward Heath.

Thus we see that it is the lust for power which knows no limitation and not the mere existence of nation-states which is the cause of war.

The exception to this general rule is where states are constructed without regard to ethnological/cultural factors. These states ultimately fracture in civil war as the majority element seeks to assert paramouncy, and the minority element resists submergence.

This phenomenon of civil war must inevitably be the stumbling block of those who seek, by force or guile, to impose on us the European Super State and its ultimate projection, World Government.

The only way in which internationalists can provide against a revolt of the people and nations they subjugate is to eliminate their ethnic (racial) differences and establish a new breed of raceless, rootless mongrel-men who do not know where they have come from, where they are going, or why.

RACE WAR

This is the reason why it is an article of faith for today's internationalists to be passionate multi-racialists.

This is the reason why Britain and other white European countries have been flooded by millions of fast-breeding coloured aliens.

This is the reason why the Establishment spends so much time and money promoting race-mixing, racial self-hate and laws to prohibit "racism" (nationalism).

Yet this is the reason why, in the long term, we who fight for national freedom can look to the long-term future with hope, for the final battle in the war I referred to earlier will be a RACIAL BATTLE.

The con-men of the Establishment might be able to trick the people over the complex economic and political issues involved in the Common Market debate.

But I am certain that they will react with rage when, as it will, it finally dawns on them that they are not only expected to give up their nationhood "in the interests of world peace", but also to commit self-inflicted genocide through race-mixing.

When that realisation comes I am certain that the British people will want to fight. When that realisation comes they will have to fight.

The job of our British nationalist movement is to speed up the coming of that realisation and take the leading role in that final racial battle, through which our people will win back their nationhood and their freedom.

We are supposed to be living in a free country, but sometimes you could be excused for not noticing it.

Tony Brewer was once a police constable in the Crawley area. His prospects in the force were bright.

Then one day last year his wife saw a letter in a local newspaper, the Crawley and Horley Focus, which enraged her. It was a vicious diatribe against the National Front. Mrs. Brewer was not a member of the NF, but she had received some of its literature through her letter box and had come to sympathise with some of its policies. She felt compelled to write to the paper in reply to the anti-NF letter, and her reply was duly published.

The next time P.C. Brewer reported for police duty after the appearance of his wife's letter, several of his colleagues remarked how much they agreed with it. Crawley has more than its share of troublesome Communists and the local police are well and truly tired of them. Mrs. Brewer's remarks about left-wing opponents of the NF, made in the letter (reprinted here), rang an immediate bell with them.

Then about three weeks later P.C. Brewer received from out of the blue a note instructing him to appear at Sussex Police Headquarters at Lewes for an interview with the Deputy Chief Constable for the county.

As the note did not state the reason for the instruction P.C. Brewer immediately made enquiries. He was informed that it was in connection with his wife's letter in the newspaper. He immediately made a request to see his local Chief Superintendent, and this was granted.

P.C. Brewer went to his Chief Superintendent and asked him bluntly why he had to go before the Deputy Chief Constable. The Superintendent protested complete ignorance — something rather improbable, as it was from his Secretary that P.C. Brewer had learned that it was in connection with the letter in the newspaper, and as he knew that the Chief Superintendent regularly read that paper.

At this point P.C. Brewer began to realise exactly what purpose lay behind his being hauled before the Deputy Chief Constable. He had himself committed no offence against police regulations and therefore he could not be punished. What they were going to do was 'reprimand' him for his wife's letter and 'lean on' him with a view to getting him to forbid his wife from again expressing such beliefs publicly.

He decided then that the whole affair represented an intolerable intrusion into his private life, and he submitted his resignation from the Police Force.

This resignation was straightaway accepted — normally policemen who declare their wish to resign are asked to change their minds. He was given a month's notice, and immediately removed from the Collator's Office, where he had been working, and placed back on the beat. The Collator's

ALL BECAUSE HIS WIFE WROTE A LETTER!

Office is the department which deals with crime intelligence, and P.C. Brewer later found out that an order had been issued that he should not be allowed into that office during his remaining month in the force unless accompanied by another police officer.

Tony Brewer left the Police Force officially on the 11th April 1974. His case represents an appalling example of petty tyranny at work against respectable, law-abiding citizens — merely on account of their suspected sympathy with patriotic organisations.

This experience set the final seal on Tony Brewer's disillusionment with the state of Britain and determined him to seek the remedy through political action. He is now the Organiser of the National Front for Crawley and Horsham Constituency.

THE LETTER THAT OFFENDED POLICE TOP BRASS

Dear Sir,

Having just read M. Bashford's letter. I feel compelled to write on behalf of the National Front.

I am not yet a member of the National Front, but having made a study of the movement and beliefs I have come to the conclusion that they are the only party who are for this country and the British people.

M. Bashford is typical of the unenlightened in referring to N.F. as Neo-Fascist. Please note the word NATIONAL (for the nation) and, dare I suggest that M. Bashford makes a comprehensive study of the National Front and its policies before making wild and hysterical statements in an effort to link the National Front with the excesses perpetrated by the Nazi Party in Germany.

Finally, I would like to add for M. Bashford's enlightenment, Fascism means dictatorship. The N.F. neither advocates dictatorship for the country nor practises it in its own organisation. Leaders are democratically elected; they cannot make any major decisions without majority approval. The N.F. is a firmly democratic party.

Much more akin to Fascism are our opponents of the left wing, who continually try to smash by force N.F. meetings, and any other meetings at which N.F. speakers are on the platform. The accusations of the left about N.F. 'fascism' are the purist hypocrisy.

Yours faithfully,
Mrs Brewer (A patriot), 73

SIR: After having left H.M. Forces on pension in 1967, I found that for once I had time to spare and also to ponder over the serious political issues of the day. Subsequently I was able to attend the odd meeting and talks by the two established parties for some form of enlightenment, as I could not accept the fact that the nation could sink any further.

Needless to say, one could find no inspiration whatever — just the traditional woolly humbug we have heard and faced for years.

I became aware of the NF, but for a long time was unable to make a contact. Eventually a Branch was formed in Slough, our neighbouring town, so I decided to enquire and clarify a few points regarding the smears. On this particular evening the meeting was well attended, and after introducing myself, I asked to meet some of the 'extreme right wing fanatics'.

"Here they all are," was the reply! Yes, they were in the main Mums and Dads, ex-Service people, etc. — all the most stable and responsible members of the community.

I have since got acquainted with a number of members and enjoy the camaraderie that exists whenever I am able to attend a function. Being a Briton that believes in fair play and honesty within our institutions, I can only express my disgust at the dishonesty of the media — especially the national press, which never pass up an opportunity to discredit the Front. One can only assume that this has come about because the Front has continued to grow and not fade out, as most of the other post-war new parties have done.

The Front, to my mind, has a clean and honest bill of health up to present, and all the while this is maintained it will continue to get my support. I firmly recommend that all the doubting Thomases that are affected by these derogatory comments make the effort and find out for a few pence what it is all about — then give their support.

SIR: Now that the Common Market Referendum is over and the 'Yes's' have won, a few chickens are coming home to roost. Numerous leading political figures who have been given great prominence as spokesmen for the anti-Market side have said that they now accept Britain's membership of Europe and will work loyally with the Government within the various European institutions. They explain this as accepting democratically the "will of the people".

A more accurate explanation would be that their strongly developed instinct of personal political survival tells them that this is the course they must take if their careers are to prosper. Up to the time of the Referendum there was at least a crumb of hope for political careerists that by backing the anti-Market side they could be on to a winner and emerge with enhanced credit and authority as a result. Now there is none, and this is not a bad thing because it greatly clears the field. We can presume from now on that those who take the anti-Market side really mean it. We know, in other words, who our friends are.

One or two established parliamentarians have stated that they intend to carry on the anti-Market struggle, and all credit to them. However, isolated from their party machines they are voices in the wilderness. Henceforth, the one organised body that is going to count in this struggle is the National Front. If it becomes the recognised leader of the anti-Market forces in Britain, this will be nothing more than it deserves, because it has, as a party and in the persons of several of its leading spokesmen, been the most long-standing and consistent opponent of the E.E.C. sell-out from the very beginning.

SIR: We hear that South Africa is shortly about to have television for the first time, programmes beginning early next year. A comment in TV Times says: "Many people hope it will prove to be a means of uniting the country's blacks and whites."

From this comment I suppose we must take it that the TV Times assumes that television in South Africa will be controlled by the same sort of people who control it nearly everywhere in the Western World and that it will be used for the same purpose — that of attacking nationhood and racial identity and of furthering communism. The trouble is that the TV Times just may be right.

I am sure that a major reason why South Africa has remained one of the sanest countries in the world in recent times is that it has up to now been free from this spiritual and social curse that the oblong screen represents. Will it now become as mad as the rest of us?

LETTER OF THE MONTH

Spearhead publishes the best letter to the press on National Front policy every month. Send your cutting to us not later than the 15th of the previous month. You could win a £1 Nationalist Books voucher. This month's winner (below) was published in the Evening Argus, Brighton.

AS AN ex-serviceman I take great exception to remarks made by Coun. S. Fitch, reported in the Evening Argus on April 24, regarding the National Front, of which I am a member.

Perhaps you have not read our statement of policy which, if read with an open mind, will show that the National Front is the only party in this country which has the interests of the British people at heart.

To call the National Front a Fascist organisation is typical of the mouthings of the Left wing which includes everything from the Labour Party, through the trades unions, to the International Socialists, whose one aim is to wreck this country and in doing so open the way for their masters in Moscow to take control. That any Socialists talk of democracy is just a sick joke and, in fact, these people are the true Fascists.

As far as serving one's country is concerned, I served in the Royal Air Force as a pilot for ten years, including flying Spitfires in the Battle of Britain, and my wife also served in the WAAF and we are both proud to be members of the National Front. We both dearly love our country and greatly resent Coun. Fitch's unfortunate remarks.

Ratepayers

I would like to remind him that most National Front members are ratepayers, probably drawing far less from the State than the Reds and, as such, are fully entitled to hire any council-owned hall in the area as is any other organisation. R. Wolton, Flt. Lt., Royal Air Force (Rtd.), Sheppy Cottage, Broomfield Avenue, Telscombe Cliffs.

Trouble shooting

Race is still the big issue

I have frequently heard comments from sincere and active National Front members to the effect that the party is in danger of getting a public image of being just a one issue pressure group — a party obsessed with the issue of Coloured Immigration.

I am told that a greater effort should be made to "play up" to a greater degree the large range of other issues which comprise the party's platform — Common Market, defence, law and order, finance and banking, etc. — in order that the party can appeal to a wider section of the public at elections.

In general terms the intention contained in this argument is not unsound, despite the fact that reductio ad absurdum version of the theory has been excessively canvassed by enemies of the party such as Martin Walker of The Guardian and George Gale, of L.B.C. Radio, who recently stated that the NF would not gain credibility with the electorate until it had "dropped its racist policies" and purged from its membership Yours Truly.

While the intention of broadening the NF's image is not unsound, the method whereby attempts are made to realise that intention in practice must be managed very carefully, otherwise the party stands to lose, not gain, credibility with the electorate, and those who miscalculate with such experimentations could find themselves, doubtless unfairly, labelled as "populists".

Just such an experiment was tried by the organisers of a Branch of the NF "somewhere in England". (I will not mention the Organisers or their Branch, as I do not feel them to be "populists" and anyway I think they have learned, albeit the hard way, a very valuable lesson).

In the recent series of local elections they produced an election address for their candidates which only mentioned Coloured Immigration once, in small print, and then only as a side reference in the context of the policies of another party in the election.

Housing, education, social services were all issues which were given special attention in their election leaflet — and quite properly so — but nowhere under any of these main headings was Immigration referred to. How any party, let alone the National Front, can discuss such issues as those without making any reference at all to the impact of Coloured Immigration is beyond my grasp.

It was also beyond the grasp of all but a very tiny percentage of White voters in the wards where those leaflets were delivered, and thus the results achieved in that area by the NF ranged from poor to downright abysmal.

Also, the number of membership enquiries to NF Head Office which those leaflets produced was vastly less than the number of enquiries attracted by election leaflets issued by Branches elsewhere.

Results elsewhere where the election leaflets, while not wholly concerned with Immigration, stressed the party's full "Stop Immigration, start repatriation" policies, ranged from fair to very good indeed — including one result of 24 per cent in West Bromwich.

Results in the North of England were also very encouraging, and in a Ward by-election in Hackney, London, where Immigration as an issue was stressed, as it has to be in that Borough, a 20 per cent result was achieved.

As the authors of the non-Immigration election leaflet are sincere hard-working officers of the party, and as they have learned a valuable lesson, let us refer to their experiment no more, much less engage in any recriminations. Let us hope that everybody in the NF can benefit from their experience.

Let us get it across, to the public in general, and to new members of our party in particular, that the word "racialist", if defined properly, is not a bad word or a word to be afraid of. Racism is the only scientific and logical basis for nationalism — and that is what the National Front is, a British nationalist party.

Our objection to Immigration and multi-racialism spring not from the fact that "there are too many Blacks in Britain", or that the smell of their food or the loudness of their music in areas where they congregate is objectionable. If those kind of reasons provided the motivation for our policies, then multi-racialists could turn round to us and say:

"Well, if we cut down the number of Immigrants in Britain by half and forbade the sale of curry powder and hi-fi amplifiers to those that remained, that would solve the problem!"

Our objections to Immigration and multi-racialism spring from the fact that as nationalists we seek to preserve the identity of the British nation. The British nation is not merely a defined patch of ground — it is the people who live on it and their common ancestry, heritage and culture, and their awareness that they are a particular people. That is what our "racialism" means.

If the British people are destroyed through racial inter-breeding, then the British nation will cease to exist. If we cannot get that message through to the British people, then all of our other policies, no matter how important they are in themselves, will be utterly meaningless and irrelevant.

A warm wonderful human being

"Harold Lever, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and special economic adviser to the Prime Minister, is likely to receive a coveted new field of influence in the post-referendum reshuffle.

"Mr. Wilson has it in mind to give him ultimate responsibility for the Arts, with the help of a junior minister to supervise day-to-day affairs. It has long been accepted that the relationship between the Government and the Arts is essentially one of money.

"Lever, an able financier both in his pre-Ministerial years and as Financial Secretary to the Treasury, would here be in his element. He is also a man of civilised tastes with the wealth to gratify them."

('Albany', Sunday Telegraph, 1/6/71).

"Harold Lever, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, who has one of the most astute minds in the Government, seems to be taking a pretty confident view of how great the 'Yes' vote will be.

"He has been taking bets with friends on the outcome on the basis that he will pay for every percentage point under 65 per cent, if the friend will pay for every point the majority is above 65 per cent."

('Peterborough', Daily Telegraph, 3/6/75)

If I had written that kind of thing about Harold Lever I don't doubt that 'anti-Fascist' buffoons like Paul Rose, M.P., would denounce my writings as being "snide . . . loaded with sinister innuendo . . ." But as I did not, we can only presume that Telegraph writers are the snide ones, or that they are ludicrous sycophants, that Mr. Lever employs an insensitive P.R. consultant.

Lively NF Referendum Campaign

The National Front conducted a very active and energetic campaign against the Common Market leading up to the Referendum on June 5th. This campaign was totally ignored by the national media, except on those occasions when disorder broke out due to the opponents of the NF trying to prevent it from speaking. This is despite the fact that the NF and its leaders have a very much longer and more consistent record of opposition to the Common Market than most of the highly publicised anti-Marketters of the Tory and Labour parties. Only in local newspapers were any actual anti-Market statements by the NF quoted at all.

GLASGOW

The NF held its first public meeting in Scotland at the Kingston Hall, Glasgow, on May 24th. As soon as the meeting was announced, local left-wing groups set about attempting to stop it taking place.

After these groups had failed to intimidate the local council into cancelling the letting of the hall to the NF, they assembled several hundred strong outside the hall on the night of the meeting. People attempting to enter into the meeting were assaulted and in some cases dealt some unpleasant injuries. One NF member, Mrs. Ada Hughes, who had travelled up with a party from Lancashire to the meeting was attacked and knocked to the ground by young left-wing thugs. Mrs. Hughes is in her sixties.

When Mr. Kingsley Read, the main speaker, arrived at the meeting, he was attacked on his way in, but succeeded in getting into the hall.

Despite the continuing left-wing violence, the meeting took place.

After the meeting Mr. Read and some of his colleagues had to be escorted by the Police to the station as left-wing mobs continued to try to intimidate them as they left the hall.

As a result of the disorder 65 left-wingers were arrested.

As is usual, the left-wingers next day sent up a mighty howl about 'police brutality', claiming that the police had used more than the necessary vigour in dealing with the trouble-makers. In fact the police were a model of restraint and would have been fully justified in using much greater force to keep order on the night.

The riot hit the national press and received massive coverage in Scottish papers.

OXFORD

Similar scenes of violence took place at Oxford, where the NF held a meeting at the Town Hall on May 12th, with John Tyndall and Martin Webster as the main speakers.

On this occasion a solid phalanx of about 600-700 reds blocked the entire street leading to the hall entrance. Police were present in totally inadequate numbers and were badly organised.

Some days before, the NF had got to hear of the intended attempt to stop the meeting and had organised a coach-load of about 50 able-bodied male members, mostly young, and led by Robin May, to come from London to re-inforce the local NF contingent. This party arrived in the town with speaker John Tyndall and made its way to the meeting place.

When it got there a police Superintendent stopped it and advised Mr. Tyndall and Mr. May that it would be unwise to try to enter the hall with the frenzied mob blocking its way. Mr. Tyndall asked the Superintendent in reply whether he meant by this that the NF contingent should surrender its right to enter its own meeting and return to London. The Superintendent in reply shrugged his shoulders. Mr. Tyndall then asked him was he ordering the NF party not to try to get in or merely advising it not to do so. The Superintendent replied that he was merely giving advice. Mr. Tyndall then turned to the members of the contingent and asked them: "are we going back home or are we going in?"

"We're going in," was the unanimous roar of reply.

The party then formed together in a tight column and charged into the red mob, forcing it back twenty or thirty yards, with the result that a gangway was cleared through which it was possible for most people to get into the hall. The meeting proceeded with left-wingers remaining outside, baying their opposition for another hour or so until most of them went off home.

One or two leaders of left-wing groups did, however, speak to the press during the evening, whining about the 'brutal' way in which the NF contingent from London, which never at any stage totalled more than 50, had attacked the left-wing crowd of 600-700!

NF Anti-Market march through Bristol

Glasgow: red rioter dragged away by police

REFERENDUM CAMPAIGN (Contd.)

The Glasgow and Oxford meetings were merely the most highly publicised of the NF campaign and this because of the rioting by opponents. Many other meetings and demonstrations went off with little or no incident.

Other meetings took place in Chelsea, Chatham, Worthing, Wolverhampton, Maidstone, Harrogate, Gravesend and Bradford (publicised in last issue).

In Bristol a motorcade through the city was organised in collaboration with other anti-Market groups. Here a feeble effort at trouble by left-wingers was easily dealt with by police. The motorcade ended in a meeting at which Martin Webster and local speakers Philip Gannaway and Graham Manning were on the platform.

Andrew Fountaine and Denis Pirie spoke frequently during the campaign.

Apart from these activities, much literature distribution took place. The NF was well equipped for the campaign, with the special anti-Common Market issue of Spearhead, an issue of Britain First dealing largely with the Market, a small broadsheet called Nationalist News and many pamphlets and leaflets. Anti-Market posters printed by the NF were seen all over the country.

On occasions NF members engaged in heckling at pro-Market meetings, during which their excellent training in anti-Market argument caused much embarrassment to the speakers. They later distributed leaflets outside the meetings.

Where no active NF branches or groups existed, individual members assisted other anti-Marketeters with their campaigns.

The NF anti-Market campaign was fought with only a tiny fraction of the funds available to the more highly publicised 'Referendum Campaign'. Nevertheless, it had an impact which will remain long after the latter has folded up.

NF CONSTITUTION POLL

When publishing our unofficial poll on the National Front Constitution last month, we stated that we would give up to 4 pages space for any articles or letters disagreeing with our proposals, and that these would be printed in the following issue, i.e. this issue.

As a result of an instruction by the National Front Directorate, however, no-one has been permitted to submit any contrary proposals from an official point of view, and we have not to date received any such contrary views from any other quarter.

Completed poll forms are still coming in, and we will announce the final figures in the next issue. However, we can say that to date the forms so far received indicate a majority of 96.7 per-cent in favour of all the proposals we made, while of the remaining 3.3 per-cent some agree with part of the proposals although not all.

St. George banner competition

The competition organised by the NF Publicity Committee for the best banner illustrating St. George fighting the Common Market dragon to be seen on the NF's St. George's Day march in Bradford last April has been won by Blackpool Group. The Group has been awarded a £5 Nationalist Books voucher. Our picture includes (at right) Mr. Keith Marsden who designed the banner and (at left) Mr. Charles Michaels who made the banner poles and stainless steel emblems.

THIS IS A TWO-MONTH ISSUE

Due to temporary financial difficulties, we have had to make this issue a two-month issue, covering June and July.

This has been because of our inability to settle our bills up to date at the normal time at which copy is given to the printers. A delay of two weeks has been necessary to call monies in from our debtors, and this has accounted for the delay in publication.

The factors causing these difficulties have been stated in our Spearhead Fund appeal.

The next issue is due to appear at the beginning of August.

Moneylenders über alles

Frightening facts about Britain's debts

Who rules Britain today?

The average man, if he did not say that it was the Labour Government, might say that it was the trade unions. But whatever power the Government or the unions might have it is not the foremost power in the land. Governments are subject to regular change. Leaders in government will come and go. Unions have considerable power, but only within the limits allowed them by the economic system.

The reality is that in our modern Western 'democratic' society there is a power that stands above the unions and above governments. In fact it can make and unmake governments.

It is the power of the moneylenders.

It is the moneylender who today shapes the entire economic and financial system under which we live. Because he is the sole source of all the new money that flows into our economy — new money that he issues as banker to the economy as interest-bearing debt — he has the economy in the palm of his hand.

And because politicians and governments can only work within the bounds of what is economically possible the moneylender controls them completely.

Just take debts to moneylenders abroad, for an example. It is a fact today that Britain is in debt to foreign moneylenders to the tune of more than £70 for every man, woman and child.

And as things are going it won't be long before the figure is well over £100.

Ever since the last war British governments have sought to escape from their problems by running to foreign bankers for loans. As a result, they've mortgaged the entire future of the British nation.

In 1945 we borrowed £1,096 million from the United States. Now, after years of repayments, we owe even more because of the changed value of the £.

Now we're getting hopelessly into debt with the Arab countries in just the same way.

Nowadays, instead of the Government going running abroad itself for loans, it has given the green light to other bodies in Britain to do so.

The upshot of this is that nationalised industries and local authorities have been borrowing abroad by the thousands of millions.

And as more nationalisation is brought in this is going to increase. The Government does not buy up industries for nothing.

Nor can it re-equip them for nothing.

Nearly all of them are run inefficiently, and therefore profits, if any, are nowhere near enough to pay for the necessary modernisation. The moneylender, and all too often the foreign moneylender, is the one who is asked to help out.

As for local authorities, the debts now run up by these bodies is absolutely appalling. Most of the enormous rate increases that are being made everywhere are accounted for by the servicing of municipal debts.

Take the Greater London Council. Virtually all its capital spending is now paid for out of borrowed money. At the end of March this year its debt was nearly £2 billion. Of its £1.3 billion spending this year, £220 million will go in interest payments — in other words, nearly 20 per-cent.

And the Council has estimated that it needs to raise £400 million this year by more borrowing. This is only going to send the annual servicing charges up further. The ratepayer of course will foot the bill.

Quite apart from the financial burden of all these colossal debts — to national government, to local government, to industry (private and state-owned), there is the additional burden that they do not enable the borrower to be master in his own house. He who pays the piper calls the tune, and today it is the great international banking houses who call the tune to which Britain has to dance. We have no effective freedom of decision of our own. We are the moneylenders' puppets.

Is there any way out of this slavery? Yes, there is. But only by a complete revolution in our way of running our financial affairs.

Remember, most of the money that is borrowed is money that did not exist prior to its being lent. It is money passed over to the borrower by cheque on the credit of the lender. It is created money.

If instead the Government created every year, not as an interest-bearing loan but as a free gift to the economy, an amount of money calculated according to the increase in the G.N.P., the massive burden of debt on the nation would gradually decrease and would eventually be eliminated.

It is the fact that, under our present system, money already borrowed can only be repaid by continually borrowing more money that makes it impossible to escape from the moneylenders' grasp.
